

Wario bros & Maya the Bee! 12/07/2019 22:19 | 13/07/2019 21:19
Series 2, Episode 10(18): The (VERY) long journey!

It's a rather cloudy day over Dumb Isle, and in the house of the Wario bros, Wario-Ware-Man and his siblings are sitting in the living watching TV. At the moment they're watching the Fatso-News.

"Meeh. Today's news ain't really of much interest to me..." Warriio said and starts yawning out of boredom.

"I agree. These days there isn't that much interesting bits to be had on TV, especially when it comes to the news." Wario-Ware-Man said.

"Well, at least now they're reporting on a robbery that's just been occuring at the Garlic Paradise store." VARIO said.

"Phah, like that's anything too serious. I've seen worse things going on the news before..." Warriio said, not really being that much excited about the current news going on the TV.

They keep watching the news though. However, the worst bits of news is about to come; Recently there has been constant graffiti vandalism going on around the island. It's mostly restricted to the town for the time being. Many workers are also facing stricter work hours and less payment, and more Dumb-Crows and Woodsters are being laid off than ever before.

"Oh, for garlic's sake I can't just stand watching this stuff anymore! It's just too much information right now!" Wario-Ware-Man said and turns off the TV, not wanting to watch any more of the news.

With the TV turned off, the Wario bros are now just sitting in the living room taking a moment of silence. VARIO then interrupts the silence, having come to think of something to say.

"You know, despite all the bad that's been happening as of late, there surely have been good times as well, right?" VARIO said.

"Yeah. I remember the time Maya's sister came to our house for the very first time; Cindella sure seemed pretty energetic and active. She also became Warriio's first love in... well, for the first time in his life." Wario-Ware-Man said. Hearing about Cindella makes Warriio think back a little.

"Sigh... Well, I sure did love her, and we had fairly good times together. If it weren't for the fact we broke up later on, I'm fairly we would've still been together by now..." Warriio said.

"I know, but relationships doesn't always last forever. That Drawcia teenage witch got her way in making her break up with you, and that's just it. On the other hand, just see this as another step for you to take in your life, and we'll be supporting you all the way." Wario-Ware-Man.

"Yeah yeah. But for most part you only do that whenever it suits you..." Warriio said to himself.

"That aside, I've come to think about that time when we were on the train back home..." VARIO said.

"Personally, I think that train trip was probably the most boring part of the day." Warriio said.

"I disagree with you there. I found it pretty much alright. It was also that time we came to first met Priscilla on the train." Wario-Ware-Man said.

"Speaking of Priscilla, I actually met her once on my way to that rich raccoon family's house, and I remember hearing her speak about some necklace she made out of a pile of diamonds when she and her friends were investigating an abandoned mine..." VARIO said.

"Oh yeah, and what was so special about that?" Warriio asked.

"Well, the way she said it to me, she had her boyfriend shrunk and trapped in the necklace for a few weeks before they got him out of it, and how she misses having him in there..." VARIO said. Warriio then interrupts him.

"Stop. Stop there right now!" Warriio said.

"What?? I'm not even talking about something inappropriate." VARIO said.

"No, but... I just want you to stop there, because... I'm not getting a single thing of what you're talking about. Sorry, but I just don't understand any of it." Warriio said.

"Hey, do you guys remember about those times when this island looked drastically different compared to today?" Wario-Ware-Man said.

"Sure I do. I even have some photos in my personal album here of various places of the island I took over the years as my memories of the island's ever-changing appearance." Warriio said and pulls up his little photo album and shows the photos for his siblings.

"Yep, those were the times..." Wario-Ware-Man said after looking at the photos in the album.

"This made me remember something... didn't we attend a movie theatre back in the early days, where we ended up going into the movie and started messing things up?" VARIO asked his other siblings.

"Hm... I can't remember we ever did that." Warriio said.

"I remember though. We actually did go to a movie theatre. The movie we were watching, if I remember correctly, was actually based on the very first episode of the 'The Wario Show' series. I also remember that after the movie froze and we had gone inside of it, we also threw out the main characters in the movie, with those guys then having come back to life in the real world!" Wario-Ware-Man said.

"Do you suppose those 'Wario bros clones' are still around today?" VARIO asked.

"Hm. I don't think so. I'm finding it veery unlikely for them to still be around, because since 'The Wario Show' ended they haven't been seen again." Wario-Ware-Man said.

They keep sitting in the living room for quite some time. However, Wario-Ware-Man eventually grows bored and starts heading outside for some fresh air. During his walk Wario-Ware-Man admires the Wario-noses running around on the grassfields looking for some garlic to eat and the way they're working together. However, his joy is cut short when he sees many parts having been covered with graffiti.

"Grr. I really HATE seeing all this ugly writing everywhere I go; Woodstrs 'rulez', 'Stupid-Crows suckz', 'Dumb-Crow Isle stinkz', and all that... those outside Woodsters that have recently come to the town definitely hasn't got anything better to do with their lives besides spreading their horrible, less-than-intelligent nonsense messages!" Wario-Ware-Man said and keeps walking. He then spots a pair of gangster Dumb-Crows at a lamppost nearby with cigarettes strewn all around the place they're standing on, and lots of empty beer bottles, indicating they may already have had one beer too many.

"Yikes, gangster Dumb-Crows... they're just as bad as gangster Woodsters, if not worse!" Wario-Ware-Man said. He then sees them playing soccer with a Wario-nose or two, seemingly not caring about them at all.

"Poor Wario-noses. They can never get a break from those gangsters, do they... Whatever, maybe I should just go home now..." Wario-Ware-Man said and starts heading back home.

Later in the house of the Wario bros, Wario-Ware-Man and pals are now having lunch. Wario-Ware-Man talks to his brothers about how he thinks their life has been like recently.

"You know, I've been thinking over it a little today, and... I'm growing bored of just sitting around on this very island we've been living on since the early days of 'The Wario Show'. We used to do a lot more back then, even going on treasure hunts from time to time. Nowadays though anything barely ever happens. Not only that, but I'm also getting quite irritated over all the outsiders that's been coming here recently just to sabotage things." Wario-Ware-Man told his brothers.

"Well, at least I've been going through quite a lot as of late, so that should be something positive, right?" VARIO said.

"Um, I don't think all that disaster you've been through really brings anything positive about them." Wario told him.

"Oh yeah... now that you mention it, I'm not really too happy thinking about all that... but I agree with Wario-Ware-Man. Things have seemed pretty stale around here as of late." VARIO said.

"Yeah. Due to all the recent vandalism going around here, and nothing new is really going on... what do you guys say? Maybe it's time for us to pack our bags and move outta here, and discover some new places?" Wario-Ware-Man said.

"I agree. There hasn't really been anything new going on here. Even I'm starting to somehow get sick of it. I wanna see something different for a change!" Wario said.

"I'm with you guys. Now that Wario's no longer around here, and our economical situation has only gotten worse, with the bills getting so ridiculously high that we can barely afford to pay them, maybe we should turn towards better sights." VARIO said.

"So you're with me?" Wario-Ware-Man asked.

"Definitely." Wario and VARIO said.

"Alright, let's pack our bags and move out of here. Hopefully we'll be able to get most of our stuff with us." Wario-Ware-Man said and goes with his siblings to start packing their bags and getting every single thing out of the house. While they're packing VARIO starts getting a bit emotional about leaving their house for good.

"Sobs I know I shouldn't be like this, but... we're finally about to really move out of this house, and... I just can't stop sobbing over it!" VARIO said and starts sobbing like mad.

"I know how it feels VARIO..." Wario said and pats VARIO on the back. "I mean, we've been living in this house since the island changed from a cold, pitch black refridgerator with never-ending snowstorms and metal pillars everywhere, to an inhabitable place with grass, nature, cities, houses, and without any constant snowing all year around. It's only natural for us to get emotional about leaving your homeplace. It happens to everyone else as well."

"Yeah, I suppose so..." VARIO said.

"Anyhow, I'm sure our new home could be just as good, if maybe not even better than our current place." Wario said and resumes packing his stuff into the bags.

"I'm with Wario there. Whatever new place we might move to I'm pretty sure we will find it just as good. Who knows, we might even see some new faces there." Wario-Ware-Man said.

"I wonder though... what about Maya?" VARIO asked.

"And what about my parrot??" Warriio also asked.

"Maya... hm. Well, maybe she'll stay here, or not. It depends on how her current situation is looking like. The parrot on the other hand... Don't worry Warriio, I'm sure we could bring him with us somehow." Wario-Ware-Man said.

After having packed everything they intend bringing with them on their journey, the Wario bros are now all set to move out of their home. Standing just near the hedge to their property reading on the newspaper, Maya takes notice of the Wario bros standing outside their home besides their Wario-bikes, with bags and everything.

"Excuse me for asking you guys, but... what are you doing?" Maya asked them.

"We're moving out due to not much new stuff happening in this place. Our bills have also gotten so high that we just can't afford to pay them off anymore. Lastly, we've been feeling rather tired living on the same island for years now, so we thought it would be time for us to move on to better things." Wario-Ware-Man said.

"You know, I've been reading in the paper here before you guys came out, and as it seems like the outsider Woodsters will be coming here to sabotage things even further. They're even considering joining with the Gangster Woodsters to cause even more vandalism around the island..." Maya said.

"Well, isn't that just great... that's about enough for us to really start moving outta here as soon as possible. I don't wanna see our house being totally vandalised and destroyed like the massive garlic flood! Worse yet, there's probably nothing we can do to stop it." Wario-Ware-Man said.

"Besides that... Wario-Ware-Man, did you ever get any job in the end?" Maya asked him.

"Well, I DID get myself one. But I didn't get to keep it in the end though." Wario-Ware-Man said.

"Aw, that's pretty bad to hear." Maya said.

"So, with all things starting to go bad around here... will you be moving out as well?" Wario-Ware-Man asked her.

"Yep. I think it's time for me to move out as well. I've also been going through an economic crisis like you guys, and even though I've paid off some of my bills by now, new ones always keep coming. I just can't afford to pay all of them with the little money I've been making at my new job." Maya said.

"Ah, ok. Life sure stinks when things don't really go the way you want it to." Wario-Ware-Man said.

"I'll be going inside to pack my bags. If you guys don't mind, I may be tagging along with you wherever you're going." Maya said.

"Sure, it's ok, we don't mind you foolowing us on our journey. We'll be waiting for you right where we are now." Wario-Ware-Man said. Maya then goes in to start packing her bags.

Now sitting on their bikes and ready to go a few minutes later, they then start the engine on their bikes.

"You know, I never thought I would say this, but... I'm gonna miss this place." Wario-Ware-Man said.

"Same here. This was really like our home... and it has been our home since old times." Warriio said.

"Bye bye house. May you always stand here in one piece, with the next guy to move in hopefully taking good care of you..." VARIO said.

"Alright, are you guys ready to leave this place?" Wario-Ware-Man asked his siblings.

"I'm ready, but with mixed feelings." Warrio said.

"I... I think I'm ready." VARIO said.

"Alright. Let's hit the road!" Wario-Ware-Man said and starts driving off with his pals, leaving behind the homes they've been living on for so long.

After they're outta town they're now driving on the road, eager to start seeing some new places.

"So, where will you guys be settling from now on?" Maya asked Wario-Ware-Man.

"Um... I'm not quite sure yet. Right now we're just travelling around Dumb-Crow Isle to see some old sights from our past. But who knows, maybe we'll be finding some place where we could live from there on." Wario-Ware-Man said. During their trip they come across a pair of buildings to the left of the road, with a sign pointing to the left saying "To Wario and co Media".

"Wait a minute, this is the place I, VARIO, and Wario-Ware-Man worked with Wario on a number of things. I wanna check out this place!" Warrio suggested to his friends.

"Sigh. I was hoping to just see some true sights of adventures we have once been going through, but... ah well, we're not in a hurry, so... let's check it out guys." Wario-Ware-Man said. After parking their bikes they start checking out the "Wario and co Media" building first.

"Hm, I remember that we started locking the front door to the 'Wario World Pictures Inc' building after a small incident that happened back in November 2010. Wario-Ware-Man, do you still have the key to both buildings?" Warrio asked him.

"Of course I do." Wario-Ware-Man said and pulls the keys out of his pocket. After unlocking the door to the 'Wario and co Media' building they then head inside to take a look at its innards.

"Guys, I think this place has changed a little since the days before the 2nd series of 'Wario bros and Maya the Bee'." VARIO said, taking note of things having been arranged after the Wario bros last left the building.

"You're right VARIO! There used to be desks here with computers, paper stacks, document scanners, and so on. Now there's just a bed and a place where a small, old-fashioned stove stands. I know Wario also started living in this building for a while before he found himself some place to live." Wario-Ware-Man said.

While looking around the building Warrio spots a number of things stashed away in a corner. It is at this spot that they see all the stuff that was once being used.

"Ok, so this is where all the stuff has gone to!" VARIO said.

"Yeah. I think Wario had to simply tuck it all into this corner to make room for the bed and the cooking place. That's what I think anyway." Wario-Ware-Man said.

"So, exactly what kind of stuff were you guys making while you were still working here? I'm curious to know." Maya asked Wario-Ware-Man.

"We mainly worked on the third series of 'The Wario Show', as well as making replays, snapshots, and custom stages for Super Smash Bros. Brawl. At this point though we were mostly doing replays on an 'off and on' basis." Wario-Ware-Man said.

"Interesting..." Maya said.

"We also briefly started to make replays for Super Smash Bros for 3DS, but due to restrictions on how many replays could be saved, and with the introduction of update patches, we were forced to pull our support for the game early." Wario-Ware-Man said.

"Alright." Maya said and looks at the pile of stuff that's been tucked away into the corner. She spots a number of things of great interest to her and picks them up, including a number of video tapes that looks vaguely familiar to her. She remembers the blooper reel tape, but she also finds a video tape she haven't seen before. Curious about it, Maya asks Wario-Ware-Man about it.

"Hey Wario-Ware-Man, I found something strange here. Do you know about this tape?" Maya said.

"Hm? I don't recognize it, but it's labelled 'Wario Show No#2-11 – Deleted scene!' ... While I'm not sure what it's about, it could be a scene we had to replace due to some circumstance." Wario-Ware-man said.

"Wonder if there's any TV lying around in here. I really wanna watch this tape." Maya said.

"Er... I'm not too keen about messing around with stuff in here, especially not without Wario's permission." Wario-Ware-Man said.

"Don't worry Wario-Ware-Man. The building seems pretty much abandoned anyway. I don't think Wario would mind it at all, let alone even care about it." Wario said.

"I'm agreeing with Wario-Ware-Man though. Besides, maybe the tape doesn't even hold anything too special." Maya said.

"Alright. Are we guys done in here?" Wario-Ware-Man said.

"I think we're pretty much done in here." Wario said.

"Alright, let's go check out the other building then." Wario-Ware-Man said and with the other guys heads out of 'Wario and co Media' to check out the 'Wario World Pictures Inc' building. Once there they then see the facility in front of them, surrounded by a security gate. Once heavily monitored by cameras to make sure the insides of the building would be preserved, the cameras are no longer active, and any other security measures seem to not be functioning anymore.

"Well guys, this is it... our oldest headquarters ever to still be standing on this spot to this day." Wario-Ware-Man said.

"Yeah, it really has been quite a long time. Even the grass is starting to take over the place inside the security gate!" WARIO said.

"And not to mention, even the door on the security gate can be opened by anyone now, because the lock on the door seems to be kaput." Wario said as he opens up the doors on the gate.

"Ok, talk about not even bothering to maintain things around here. Not only are the security measures out of function, even the area where the WWP Inc building stands are starting to be overtaken by vegetation. It's becoming clear to me now that this place has been fully abandoned for years." Wario-Ware-Man said. Wario then pulls up a photo of the building back in its early years and shows it to the other guys.

"I've had this photo of mine for quite a long time now, and... this is how it looked like back in the day." Warrio said.

"Yeah, this surely brings me back some memories; on this photo the building looks much more new, and there were wooden garlic and flower beds just outside the entrance to the building." Wario-Ware-Man said.

"Moreover, there's no security gate around the building, so this is definitely from way before we decided to close it down!" VARIO said. Wario-Ware-Man takes another look at the WWP Inc building on the photo, and compares it with the building still standing today, and realizes that the old times are pretty much gone.

"Yeah... it's becoming more and more obvious that this building had seen its best of times. Is this the only photo you've got of it?" Wario-Ware-Man asked Warrio.

"Afraid so... I remember having some photos of the insides of the building. I tried looking for them in our cellar, but they seem to have gone missing somehow, so... this is the only one left." Warrio said.

"Aw, such a shame... but at least we have something of the WWP Inc building from its more glorious days, so that's good." Wario-Ware-Man said.

"So... should we go and take a look inside?" VARIO asked.

"Hm... I have a feeling there may not be much left in there, but... let's go in there." Wario-Ware-Man said.

They head in to see the insides of the building. However, the Wario bros are in for a shock; it doesn't seem to have fared much better on the inside compared to the outside. Lots of vegetation have managed to grow through the bottom sides of the walls, and grass and flowers are now sticking out of the floor in almost every room of the building.

"My garlic... this sure doesn't look anywhere better." Wario-Ware-Man said.

"Well, at least this tells us that nature will always break and tear things down given enough time without any further maintenance being done... so, what kinds of stuff were you guys making in here?" Maya said.

"Well... we worked mainly on 'The Wario Show' here from series 1 to 2, as well as something else; Wario Fatsos Inc. However, due to the fact we weren't able to devote enough time to that series, we had to cancel it in the end." Wario-Ware-Man said.

"Yeah, there were some things that just simply didn't pan out... not all ideas you come up with may turn out as good as you originally hoped it would." VARIO said.

"It was also in here that we and Wario were having our best days making loads of Brawl replays, stages, and snapshots." Wario-Ware-Man.

"Ah, those were the times... Back then Brawl was such a popular game on the Wii, and lots of things were really going on back then, what with all the mods that were being created by those talented individuals." Warrio said.

"Indeed... altogether our time in this building lasted from 2009 to 2014, after which we decided to fund Wario and co Media where we hoped to start making better things. It wasn't all smooth sailing though due to various circumstances, and quite many ideas of ours weren't realized. While the building continue to stand where it is, its innards haven't really been touched in a long time." Wario-Ware-Man said.

"Speaking of Brawl. It's said that you, I and VARIO are based off those guys from that game. Do you think this could be true?" Warrio said.

"That could very well be possible. After all, every character has some sort of origin from somewhere. In the case of 'The Wario Show', I think that could be sorta true." Wario-Ware-Man said.

"Do you think anything in the Wario and co Media building should be salvaged before it all decays?" VARIO asked.

"Hm. I may consider getting it done at some point. I mean, Wario's no longer around here, and it's highly unlikely we'll ever return to work there again." Wario-Ware-Man said.

"To think that this is what remains of WWP Inc is unbelievable, but also a bit depressing for me to see..." VARIO said.

"Yep, times come and go... anyway, I think we've seen everything around here. I suggest we better leave this place behind us for the time being before we do anything more here." Wario-Ware-Man said, with the others agreeing.

After having taken a tour inside both buildings they then set off with their bikes on the road again to discover more places that have since been forgotten or left behind. They're then about to drive past a bus stop.

"STOP!" Wario told the other guys, after which they stop their bikes at the bus stop.

"Um... sorry if I ask, but why should we be stopping here, at a bus stop?" Maya said.

"Well, you see. This is where I and my siblings took the bus home after a disastrous night camping in the woods." Wario told her.

"I remember those events. What happened was we had our tent stolen at one point just before we returned. Without any tent over our heads we couldn't sleep comfortably that night, so we decided to start making our way back home, but not without enduring the dangers that were lurking in the woods." Wario-Ware-Man said.

"Gosh... that must've been terrible for you guys." Maya said.

"Well, more like strange and... pretty hectic. But at least we managed to get home in the end." Wario-Ware-Man said.

After stopping by the bus stop they continue on. A while later they stop by a two-way point.

"Hm. Which way should we take?" Wario-Ware-Man wondered.

"I'd advise not turning to the left though, because that's where I fell down from a dead end." VARIO said.

"Hm, that makes me remember the day we and Maya were having a day out on the roads. While things started out fairly good, it all ended in disaster after a gang of Biker-Woodsters assaulted us and stole our shopping bags." Wario-Ware-Man said. Heeding VARIO's advice, they turn to the right.

Later on, far away from the town, they come across the biker competition site where the Wario bros and Maya came to meet for the first time.

"So, this is the place where we first met, back when you guys were participating in the biker competition." Maya said.

"That's right. To this day I'm still grateful for you winning the competition for us." Wario-Ware-Man said.

"Aw, that was nothing. I only did what I felt was the right thing for me to do." Maya said.

"Another thing I remember is me and VARIO having a bit of a challenge of our own, because out of nowhere an mad elk-Woodster started chasing us when we got lost in the woods, along with other things happening." Warriio said.

"Yeah. We managed to shake it off in the end though." VARIO said.

Leaving the place behind, they keep on driving. About 10 miles later they reach a building with a Wario-Bike motif above the entrance.

"Hang on now... this is the place where I and my siblings were given a test drive for the prototype of a new Wario-Bike that they considered starting mass-producing." Wario-Ware-Man said.

"I remember it quite well... right before we even left home my bike didn't wanna start itself, and I was forced to try catch up with my siblings. My journey towards this factory was anything but smooth, especially since I had to use my old three-wheeled bicycle." VARIO said.

"Yep, you were having it tough. And we're sorry for not hearing you before we left, but the sound of the engines on our bikes sorta drowned out every other sound, and... well, that's how we came not to hear you." Warriio said.

"At least the Wario-Bike factory seem to be up and running even to this day. The lights inside the windows and the smoke coming from the chimneys on the roof are a fairly good indicator on this." Wario-Ware-Man said.

After taking a brief look at the building they drive off again. A little while later they all feel the need to buy themselves some refreshments, so they stop by a store that Wario-Ware-Man and his siblings went to while testdriving the Wario-Bike prototype.

"Hm, this place feels familiar to me." VARIO said.

"I agree. And reading the name above the entrance, I'm relieved to know that even after all these years, the name of this store is STILL 'Konsum'." Warriio said. They head into the store to buy all the stuff they need, and after they're done they hit the road again. On their way out of the road surrounded by forests on both sides they pass by an barren and very overgrown field to the right side. They stop there for a while to investigate the site.

"Oh my garlic, there sure are a few crates lying around here and there on this field, both whole and broken!" Wario-Ware-Man said.

"And not to mention the various bits of planks and so on lying around..." Maya said.

"Wait a minute, this is the place the Glupskiness competition took place at!" VARIO said.

"You think so?" Warriio asked.

"Yeah. You, I, and Wario-Ware-Man was participating in it long ago. I can still remember the simple goal of it; stuff as many crates or junk as you can into your belly before any of the others do it!" VARIO said.

"VARIO's right there. This is really the place where we competed against the other guys, primarily Wario, to eat the most stuff possible. While most of what existed of the competition are now gone, these lone crates spread around the area are the only traces left of it. I can even spot the place where you and VARIO were sitting at eating all the garlic." Wario-Ware-Man said.

"Oh yeah, that one bit comes to mind as well, when VARIO and I tricked Wario into eating a box with strong mustard! He must've had a very heated moment after that, heh-heh." Wario said.

"I just can't believe that this place is now mostly gone and forgotten by everyone on this island..." VARIO said and starts shedding a tear on his face.

"I somewhat agree there VARIO, but you have to remember that things always come and go, no matter how big or small they are." Wario-Ware-Man reminded him. They keep looking around the place for some time. Wario picks up one of the crates that are still whole and opens it, only to find the garlic in there to be in a not-so-good condition.

"Aagh. Those garlicks sure must have seen their days by now! It's so foul-smelling and rotten to the point of being non-edible!" Wario said in disgust and tosses the crate away. VARIO meanwhile is checking one of the other crates, and finds a bunch of strange things inside it.

"Ok, here we have... a buncha bike tires. The remains of a Woodster's meal, a few rotten cloves of garlic, and... YAAAH!!!" VARIO started to scream comically and drops the crate to the ground, having seen a bunch of ugly-looking Wario-noses who have taken refuge inside of it.

"I-I think I'm o-o-outta here!!!" VARIO said and runs back to the place they parked their bikes on.

"Alright, are everyone ready to continue on?" Wario-Ware-Man asked his friends.

"I'm more than ready to leave this place now!" VARIO said decidedly.

"I don't think there's really that much more to see here. I mean, this is basically all what remains of the competition; a couple crates lying around, and the whole plane that was once filled with sand is now just simply grass and flowers." Wario said. After having checked out the site our friends then carry on with their journey.

Later while driving on the road far, far away from civilisation, our friends drive just past a gas station. VARIO recognizes it, remembering something that happened a long time ago.

"Hey guys, check out that gas station to the left side; this is the place where I fooled the Woodster police while they were chasing me for having tried to pee behind a park meter!" VARIO pointed out.

"Wario-Ware-Man, do you think that's true?" Maya asked.

"It's quite a loong story, and it would take me about a day to explain it all from start to end... I suggest you to check out the earlier stories of the 'The Wario Show' series for more information whenever you feel you have the time." Wario-Ware-Man said.

Further on their trip, Maya spots a deserted plain in the distance to the left side of the road. Not being in a hurry, Wario-Ware-Man agrees they should check it out to see what it really is. When they finally arrive there they see that the place really IS deserted, with almost no signs of nature or vegetation having overtaken it.

"Gosh... this place must really be very empty and plain. It all consists of mostly sand." VARIO said.

"Yeah. There's still signs of some metal on the ground though." Wario said, stepping on the bits of metal still visible in the sand.

In the middle of the plain they find an entrance sign saying "Wario's Cinema". There's even a few paper mugs that once were filled with popcorn. The Wario bros are now more and more reminded of their past.

"You know, seeing all this stuff again, it's all coming back to me. This reminds me of the period when Dumb-Crow Isle was known as 'Shadow Moses Island!'" Wario said.

"Exactly what I'm thinking as well... It's unbelievable there's remains from our past adventures littered around at places over Dumb-Isle! I think it's more than evident now that our earliest times are now mostly memories existing in our minds..." Wario-Ware-Man said.

"Did Wario actually own a cinema at a place like this? I mean, there's almost nothing around here besides these bits and pieces." Maya said.

"I can tell you that Wario did indeed run a cinema. Me and my siblings were the only customers to attend it. We had a great time in there despite this though." Wario-Ware-Man said.

"But, was this even the place where it stood?" Wario asked.

"Um... I'm not entirely sure, but... the entrance sign, along with the empty popcorn mugs, and the film reels spread around the place... I think that alone is more than enough for the cinema to have been standing on this spot." Wario-Ware-Man said.

After having seen all the sights on their trip, the Wario bros and Maya, now driving on the road again, think over how their future would be looking like elsewhere.

"We sure have been seeing lots of sights today, haven't we?" Wario-Ware-Man asked.

"Yeah. Who knows how our future will be shaped from here on..." Maya said.

"It's strange, isn't it? The thought of no longer living in our home territory, as well as having relieved fragments from some of our past adventures, are still spinning around inside my mind." Wario said.

"Yep, it has been a fun ride for all of us, both with its ups and downs. I'm still unable to believe that we've been living on this island for so many years. Even so, change has now come about where we live, or lived. Over time our home area may very well become the subject of further vandalism and disaster. Should we have stayed, I think we all would've been in for quite a bit of hell for sure." Wario-Ware-Man said.

"Well, the fun will always end at some point. I think our new home place could turn out even better. Maybe we'll even find new friends, as well as much more interesting things to do." Maya said, with the Wario bros nodding in agreement. Later on during their journey it starts to rain heavily.

"My garlic, now it starts to rain... It may just be me, but I have a feeling this could be a sign that this will be our very last day on Dumb-Crow Isle, once known as 'Wario-Island', and before that 'Shadow Moses Island.'" Wario-Ware-Man said to himself.

"Grr... I'm more than annoyed at this heck of a rain weather!" Wario complained.

"Yeah, me too. I wanna find a place where we can stay until the rain has subsided!" VARIO said.

"We're in luck, because just a distance away is a cafeteria!" Maya said. Feeling a bit tired of all the driving, Wario-Ware-Man decide they should stay there and take a break for a while.

Inside the cafeteria, our friends are now indulging in their favorite snacks of choice; Wario-Ware-Man is eating on garlic-flavored donuts. Wario and VARIO are eating on ice creams. Maya meanwhile are eating on some of her honey cookies she bought at the store earlier.

"It sure has been a great day for the all of us, don't you think so?" Wario-Ware-Man said.

"Yeah, VARIO and I think the same as well. We've even seen some things from our past, and it has been an real eye opener to me." Warriio said.

"I however, feel I've been learning new things today as a result of the sights we've been seeing so far. I'm a bit disappointed though to not have experienced any of your past 'adventures'." Maya said.

"Well, look at it this way; your debut in 'The Wario Show' came fairly late, and by then that series were almost towards its end. If you were thought about during the series' start, I think things would have turned out quite differently, if not more so." Wario-Ware-Man told Maya. Thinking about it for a while, Maya agrees.

"You're right. If I were around at that time, the TWS series wouldn't even have been the same. I suppose I find the stuff I've seen today to be more than enough." Maya said. They end up staying at the cafeteria for an hour or so.

After leaving the cafeteria our friends are now back on the road again. Although the rain has subsided the rather thick, gray clouds remain over the sky.

"The clouds are still over us." Warriio said.

"I know, but at least the rain is over, so for now we can enjoy the day once more." Wario-Ware-Man said. However, the clouds are growing thicker and heavy as our friends keep driving on the road.

"Hm, I'm feeling unsure about whether or not this is going to turn into more raining later on..." Wario-Ware-Man said to himself.

"I think it's going get worse than that, because the winds are getting stronger and stronger for each minute." Maya said as she feels the winds blowing on her antennas. At one point during their trip a strong gust of wind blows in their direction, almost making them fly off their bikes.

"Yikes... Mother nature sure isn't quite happy today!" Wario-Ware-Man said.

They keep driving despite the current weather conditions. Over time the wind keeps getting stronger, and starts shifting direction rapidly, with load of leaves blowing around like crazy.

"Ok, this current weather is really starting to disorientate me!" Wario-Ware-Man said.

"Agreed. Maybe we should be turning back?" VARIO asked.

"It's too late to return back home now. We have to keep going!" Wario-Ware-Man said.

"No, I meant that we maybe could return back to the cafeteria again and wait for the weather to cool down!" VARIO said.

"Aha, so that's what you mean! ... well, if only we knew where it was again..." Wario-Ware-Man said.

It isn't until they start seeing trees and other things flying around that they realize things just doesn't seem right. Maya then sees a huge tornado approaching in their direction.

"Uh-oh. Looks like we're in for a bit of trouble guys!!" Maya said and points at the tornado.

"A tornado? On an little island like this??" Warriio questioned.

"We better take cover underground somewhere, and that quickly!" Maya warned the other guys.

"But... I can't see any place around here where we could take cover. Maybe we should just turn back!" Wario-Ware-Man suggested.

"No way. It's near impossible to outrun a tornado!! I don't think it's a good idea!" Maya protested.

"Well, we could always try anyway!" Wario-Ware-Man said and starts turning back to get away from the tornado, with the other siblings following him. Having no other choice, Maya follows them.

Our friends try driving away from the tornado, but after a minute the tornado starts sucking them into it. After being twirled around inside it for a short while the Wario bros and Maya are thrown away into the skies, with bikes and everything.

"I told you it wasn't such a good idea Wario-Ware-Man!!!" Maya yelled at him.

"No, but at least it was worth tryiiiiinnng!!!" Wario-Ware-Man screamed. They keep arguing at each other as they disappear more and more into the skies.

Later, in an entirely different place, Wario-Ware-Man and pals are now walking on the road with their bikes. Little do they know where they now have ended up at.

"Wow, talk about a ride we got there!" Warrio said.

"Well, it's too bad our bikes broke after we landed on ground again, so we have to walk the remaining miles." Wario-Ware-Man said as they all keep walking by foot. Just then a yellow little girl duck with brown hair and red dress walks past them in the same direction they're going. Her name is Suzy, and she's on her way back home from somewhere.

"What in the... now that's a sight unusually seen around here; a trio of fat guys and a giant bee walking on the road with their motor bikes? That's something I've gotta tell my friends when I get back home to our headquarters again." Suzy said to herself and leaves the other guys behind.

"Gaah, I wanna go back home now. This pushing around on a bike is just too much for me!" VARIO complained.

"VARIO, we're simply too far away from where our home island is situated at, and none of us are even willing to go all the way back!" Warrio said.

"I'm agreeing with Warrio there. It's just too late for us to start turning back now. In fact, even I'm not really sure where we are right now." Maya said.

After a fair bit of walking they spot a town in the distance, and one looking drastically different to the one on their home island.

"Ah, at last... some place to stay!!!" Warrio exclaimed.

"Yeah. As soon as we get there, I'm just gonna sit down and stretch out my feet and not do a single thing for hours..." Maya said.

"That town in front of us... I feel this could be the start of our new life." Wario-Ware-Man said to himself.

"Excuse me, but what are you talking about??" Warrio asked.

"I mean, that if we go to that town to find a place to live, maybe we could find even more exciting things to do!" Wario-Ware-Man said.

"Yes, but where exactly in the town could we find an apartment to live in?" VARIO asked.

"I'm not sure... I think we'll be able to find a place somewhere, however it may turn out to be like." Wario-Ware-Man said.

"So long Wario Island, or Dumb-Crow Isle as it's now called. We're now moving into a much better place!" Warrio said.

"Alright. What do you say? Should we try settle ourselves in that town?" Wario-Ware-Man asked the others.

"I'm all up for it!" Warrio said.

"I feel the same as well!" VARIO said.

"I think we should move there!" Maya said.

"Ok, then we'll be living there from now on. Come on guys, let's find some place to stay. My mind is rather tired after all the stuff that's happened today." Wario-Ware-Man.

"On our way!" Maya said. They all then head into the town to find a hotel to stay at before they try seeking into an apartment. This could very well be the start of their new life, as a whole.

Well, this is it I'm afraid. The Wario bros and Maya the Bee have now finally moved from their home island to a place that's completely new to them. What adventures may await them there will be told in Series 3 of 'Wario bros and Maya the Bee'! ...

And yes, this is really the last story of this 2nd series. From here on 'Wario bros and Maya the Bee' will finally be breaking up with 'The Wario Show', and instead go in its own direction. It has been a fairly long time since the TWS series was first thought of, and since then a lot of things have changed, for better or worse; The writing format have been revamped, the fart and outhouse jokes have been tossed out, and Warrio's have had himself a love interest, which didn't last for long. Indeed, lots of things have changed over the years, and for the third part of this series even more changes might be coming about.

This is also the last story to be taking place on Dumb-Crow Isle. From this story on, future stories will be following the adventures of the Wario bros in their new place of home. And yes, I'm done babbling about all this boring stuff to you readers now, no need to worry.

Anyway, here's hoping for the 3rd series of WB&MtB to someday surface. In the case it does, it will be radically different to everything that has come and gone so far. ~Wario-Ware-Man – Narrator of the series.

The End..